This patches an issue where `acts_as_list would` try to swap virtual attributes, resulting in a crashing ActiveRecord write_attribute method.

I observed this issue in combination with `acts_as_taggable`, I have attached a partial stack trace here. My solution built on a similar fix for the `paper_trail` gem, from this PR.

Pull Request Feedback

Personal feedback based on the open source pull request culture

How does the issue manifest?

Think about what exactly doesn't work the way you'd like it to.
Focus on manifestations, not yet on explanations.

What is your interpretation?

Give a traceable explanation of your believes of why the issue arose. If you aren't accusatory, this can give your counterpart a chance to correct your reasoning.

How would you suggest to fix it?

State these suggestions as a form of personal belief—because they are. It is helpful to show your approach in detail, without defending it or arguing for it.

Explain the reasoning of your fix.

Separating this from step 3 allows you to argue in a less emotional way, describing your deductions in an almost mechanical matter. This often helps you spot where your suggestion relies on personal beliefs as well.

Show you made it easy to apply.

This step firstly consists of making your suggestion easy to implement.

Set up a new schedule for that meeting. Just like you write a pull request that can be merged without conflicts and test coverage on par with the standard for the project you contribute to.

The idea is to make it easier to accept your suggestion than to reject it. You're overcoming status-quo bias here, so be prepared to invest a lot of effort.
